*"We tell to-day the deeds of story,
And legends of the olden time;
While voices from an ancient glory
Still charm us as a silver chime."*

Since honour from the honourer proceeds,
How well do they deserve that memorize
And leave in Books for all posterities
The names of worthies and their virtuous deeds :

When all their glory else, like water-weeds
Without their element, presently dies,
And all their greatness quite forgotten lies,
And when and how they flourished no man heeds !

How poor remembrances are statues, tombs,
And other monuments that men erect
To princes, which remain in closed rooms
Where but a few behold them, in respect
Of Books, that to the universal eye
Show how they lived ; the other where they lie.

-John Florio (1553-1625).
